

Important Information regarding Culture Creative's work during the Covid-19 pandemic

Please Read:

Culture Creative (CCL) remains committed to delivering its programme of illuminated trails at the end of 2022. However, during the current Covid-19 pandemic this is not without its challenges.

With continuing uncertainty surrounding the spread of this virus, CCL along with its key partners, accepts that at any point some or all of our winter events could be affected. Therefore the viability of each of our trails continues to be reviewed and, to ensure that the best interests of our artists, staff and customers is constantly considered, we have put the following protocols in place:

Artist Commissions and Contracts are issued subject to the following review protocols:

- The viability of CCL's winter trails programme continues to be reviewed on a month by month basis.
- No commitments to artists or contractors will be made before June 2022.
- Other than the initial application process, no artist will be expected to undertake work on their commission unless a contract has been issued or a written agreement is in place.
- The timelines for the application process may need to be adjusted. If this is the case we will publish new timelines on our website and/or contact artists already involved in the application process.
- Artists shortlisted to Stage 2 of the process will be asked to provide a real-time cash flow, i.e. based on actual requirements. This is to enable us to better manage cash flow across all our sites and follow ticket sale trends. Each site has an Associate Producer working on its event and they will work closely with artists to oversee cash flows and final budgets.
- No artist should purchase any products or materials for their commission unless agreed with the Associate Producer in line with agreed cash flow and budget, and supported by a signed final contract and purchase order.
